

Supervising Skills Training for your team

Inspire your staff to work smarter and increase their emotional resilience with a useful and simple process.

How are your staff performing and feeling about their work?

Too often it takes a problem with staff or our organisation's systems to make us pay attention.

No-one wants a boss who stands over them and micro-manages their work. And the other extreme of leaving staff to their own devices without support isn't popular or effective.

You can develop the collaborative leadership skills to really find out how your staff are going. Catch team issues early, give staff the support they need for great communication – and great performance.

What will I learn?

Practical skills for high-quality supervision

- Set clear key work areas and performance expectations collaboratively
- Apply micro-skills and structure to run effective sessions around performance management

Greater awareness of how you operate

- Work on the self-limiting messages that hold you back as a supervisor
- Develop the emotional resilience to manage your reactions to challenging dynamics

Your role in supervision

- Manage balancing your variety of roles as learning facilitator, coach/mentor, teacher, manager and debriefer.

Confidence to have challenging conversations

- Skills to intervene in challenging dynamics or dominant, aggressive or needy behaviour
- Give hearable feedback, work with hot spots and flat spots
- Bring out what might be going on that may be in the way of people's learning
